

attitudes on sexual misconduct
at Princeton

2017 Survey

To read the complete results from the 2017 We Speak Survey:
sexualmisconduct.princeton.edu/reports

1 in 5

undergraduate students

1 in 11

graduate students

experienced sexual misconduct, including sexual harassment, sexual assault, dating violence or stalking during the 2016-2017 academic year.

61%

of undergraduate students who experienced sexual assault identified their assailant as another Princeton undergraduate.

22%

of graduate students who experienced sexual assault identified their assailant as another Princeton graduate student.

The odds that undergraduates who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual, queer, asexual or questioning experienced sexual misconduct were approximately 2 times greater than undergraduates who identify as heterosexual or straight.

1st and 2nd year undergraduates had the greatest odds of experiencing sexual misconduct over the 2016-2017 academic year.

38%

of undergraduates who experienced sexual assault first encountered their assailant in an eating club.

Of the 8% of graduate women who experienced sexual harassment during the 2016-2017 academic year, 23% said that the harassment involved an employee/staff member, faculty member, or postdoc.

87%

of all students know where to go on campus to get help should they or a friend be sexually assaulted.

